The supreme court has ruled that certain types of speech are not covered under the first amendment, including, but not limited to, slander, libel, intentionally inciting panic, soliciting crimes, and most relevant to this situation, certain types of harassment. Since the harassment in question also includes solicitation of sexual conduct, it would fall under sexual harassment. Because the sexual harassment took place at an institution of education, and was retaliatory, Dennis is looking at a potential class 2 felony. This, of course, assumes people start filing charges against the alleged felon.

OP has been subjected to a combination of online and real-life stalking, harassment, intimidation, and bullying. There was a discussion earlier about whether the Suburban Express guy could be charged for cyberbullying/cyberharassment, laws regarding which are still in their infancy, but now he has committed regular/real-life harassment, for which laws have been there for a long time and the nature of which makes it a felony, according to the person who posted above (links to the relevant statutes etc. would be useful).

OP, I think you should also consult a lawyer (Student Legal Service seems the obvious choice; they are familiar with Suburban Express and its activities). The university hasn't done anything about this issue till now, but now the Suburban Express guy is defacing public/university property and using university resources like noticeboards in campus buildings to harass and intimidate students. This should be reported to someone in the university administration, though I am not sure who is the correct person. UIUC has a duty to protect its students from harassment, and not be passive and refuse to do anything because they fear lawsuits.

I would have suggested ISS too, but after their lip-service-only performance last time ("we will write to the Attorney General" - something from which nothing ever materialized), I don't know if approaching them will be worth your time.

If a prospective undergraduate/graduate student or faculty were visiting, and saw those flyers, it wouldn't reflect well on the university. This is much more hurtful to the university's image than the ads he keeps posting in classrooms and noticeboards despite being told not to. It is high time the university at least acknowledges this menace, and imposes sanctions on him and his company's operations on campus.

[\[-\]](#) darkassin Grad Student, LIS 10 points 18 days ago

I particularly agree with your last point. If the owner of the business is going to harass students on campus, then his business shouldn't be allowed to pick up and drop off on campus. I honestly don't know what the rules regarding that are, though; I think that it'd be up to university discretion.

Lawsuits aside, I think that ensuring his behavior has immediate consequences to his business's bottom line is the only possible way to communicate to him that this sort of behavior is unacceptable. I've seen jilted high school students with more grace and poise.

"we will write to the Attorney General" - something from which nothing ever materialized
You'd have to check with whoever told you that, because I know ISS never voted on anything like it.

I did sponsor a resolution calling for Student Legal Services to expand their service beyond Champaign County, though. Their response - which I got second-hand - was that they would need a massive increase in funding just to support the counties around Champaign. I remember something like 50% being thrown around, to account for more lawyers, staff, travel and lodging, etc., and you would need approval from the University Board of Trustees to allow service outside of Champaign County. If that's something people want, ISS can push for it. Just know that it'll take years to accomplish.

But I digress, what would you have ISS do about the fliers?

"we will write to the Attorney General" - something from which nothing ever materialized

You'd have to check with whoever told you that, because I know ISS never voted on anything like it.

From this Daily Illini article:

Student Body President Damani Bolden responded with his current progress on this issue.

"I am drafting a letter on behalf of the student body to the attorney general (Lisa Madigan) addressing this issue," Bolden said. "This is the best way for this body to handle that situation without having to engage in a lawsuit of our own so that we don't have to use, at a minimum, $10,000 of student fee money to engage in a lawsuit with Suburban Express."

Regarding this:

But I digress, what would you have ISS do about the fliers?

You think I should have the answer? The ISS represents the student body, it has several members, presumably smart, articulate ones because they campaigned and got elected. They should be able to brainstorm and discuss and come up with solutions to problems faced by students, or at least be able to make some progress towards an effective solution, rather than be all talk and no action.

permalink parent

[\[-\] Senator\_Lear](#) Student Senator, GRAD 5 points 18 days ago

Student Body President Damani Bolden responded with his current progress on this issue.

Good to know. I'll ask him about it at tomorrow's ISS meeting (7pm in the Illini Union's Pine Lounge).

You think I should have the answer?

You said you would have suggested us in the past, so I thought you might. I'd agree that ISS spends a disproportionate amount of time talking rather than doing, but there's also a big disconnect between "something should be done about X" and "here's what can be done about X". I think the fliers are childish and rude, but they're already against the rules. I think predatory business practices are odious, but if they're disconnected from the University there's little to be done. I've personally been racking my brain about this whole mess since spring, but I'm drawing a blank as to what can actually be done to fix the issue. I'd like to hear what others have to say about it.

permalink parent

[\[-\] FreshouttaWater](#) I'm a big boy now 4 points 18 days ago

The ISS should be screaming bloody murder to everyone on staff at the University who is willing to listen. Here are just a few ideas:

- 1) Draft a letter to the Chancellor requesting a reply
  - 2) "Invite" a Dean to an ISS meeting to speak about what he/she thinks the school should plan to do about this...to hold them accountable. Then, you can question the Dean's actions, or lack thereof.
  - 3) Contact news agencies on behalf of the ISS
- Etc.

There are plenty of things that can be done.

permalink parent

[\[-\] Senator\_Lear](#) Student Senator, GRAD 1 point 18 days ago

Various members of ISS (including myself) have spoken with an Associate Dean of Students, the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, and the Chancellor, but the administration is unwilling or unable to go beyond letting Student Legal Services offer unofficial advice and help students find discount/pro bono representation. The unspoken feeling seems to be that Suburban Express hasn't done anything illegal or against University rules - that can be proved - yet, and that going after them more directly would expose the University to litigation.

To go item by item:

| Draft a letter to the Chancellor requesting a reply

The Chancellor is aware of the issue (though perhaps not the reinstatements) and seems content to allow the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs to handle the matter for now (see the above text).

| "Invite" a Dean to an ISS meeting to speak about what he/she thinks the school should plan to do about this...to hold them accountable. Then, you can question the Dean's actions, or lack thereof.

The relevant Dean here would be the Dean of Students. ISS honestly should have him to more meetings to talk on the record, but ISS usually directs questions for the Dean and his office to the Associate Dean who serves as our advisor.

| Contact news agencies on behalf of the ISS

The Student Body President or Vice-President can speak for ISS and the Student Body officially, and ISS has a dedicated reporter from the Daily Illini. The press will continue to report what they feel is news worthy, not what ISS asks them to cover.

[\[-\] FreshouttaWater](#) I'm a big boy now 2 points 18 days ago*

Regarding the first 2 points, I think those are cop-out answers/actions

(not you personally, but the ISS).

You think that things get done if you only make a single attempt, get a no, then throw in the towel? The proper actions of the ISS should be to FIGHT for student rights/protections. If you get a no, you try again, just in a slightly different way.

As for there being no "evidence" - these flyers were found in 4 buildings according to other students on this thread: Everitt, the Armory, Gregory Hall, and Altgeld Hall. You cannot tell me there are no cameras in any of these buildings. The ISS should demand an investigation.

permalink parent

[\[-\] Senator\_Lear](#) Student Senator, GRAD 1 point 18 days ago

FIGHT for student rights/protections

ISS does fight for your rights and protection. Members of ISS campaign for fair student loan practices, leniency for non-violent offenses, "good samaritan" protections, fairness in academic integrity hearings, upkeep for emergency systems on campus, and more. Their legal threats to Murph aside, Suburban Express has only tried to enforce the contracts riders agreed to - odious and legally flawed as they may be. As of right now, helping students build defenses and find attorneys is all the University's legal counsel is like to approve - and thus all that's likely to get done. If you could get thousands of students and parents to rally on the Quad in support of stronger action or more funding for Student Legal Services, maybe that would change things.

The ISS should demand an investigation.

If OP files a police report and asks us to help, I'm sure ISS would call on the University PD to investigate. Those cameras exist for a reason after all.

permalink parent

[\[-\] AlmostGrad100](#) . 2 points 18 days ago*

ISS does fight for your rights and protection. Members of ISS campaign ...

I would really like to know what the ISS actually does. Granted I don't follow ISS' activities very closely, but from what I recall from reading the Daily Illini and on reddit, they seem to spend a lot of money (paid from student tuition) on useless stuff like freebies on Quad Day and on cupcakes; the iclicker rental is the only productive thing I have heard that the ISS did, and I don't know how much it benefits students compared to the money that goes into keeping ISS running.

Of course, the ways in which the ISS serves the student body need not all be financial, but your "we can't do anything, our hands are tied, we spoke to the university administration but they didn't listen" attitude makes you sound wimpy and ineffectual. If something doesn't have a direct, easy solution, you can't do it - that's the impression I get. Why would anyone approach the ISS at all if all it took was speaking to a Dean about a direct solution - they could do it themselves then, with no need to get the ISS involved.

The only reason Suburban Express couldn't bully us when this all started was because of the moderator's personal courage - he refused to take down the banner when he, a mere student, could face a lawsuit while protecting the rights of what is effectively an online forum he moderates as a volunteer, and you are saying that a well-funded organization like the ISS is unwilling to risk that? And once he acted courageously, help started flowing in, in the form of support from Popehat, computer forensics experts, etc.

Also, I am concerned about whether ISS senators are well-coordinated and kept well-informed, since you seemed unaware of the proposed letter from ISS to the Attorney General. I would expect as a senator you read the Daily Illini, at least the parts that pertain to ISS, and would be aware of what the other senators are saying to the press.

permalink parent

[\[-\] Senator\_Lear](#) Student Senator, GRAD 0 points 17 days ago

I would really like to know what the ISS actually does. The ISS doesn't get a whole lot of publicity, in part because the majority of our business is neither exciting or controversial (e.g. nominating advisory committees for the administration, reviewing proposals to change degrees or open research centers, discussing upgrades to campus IT infrastructure...) and in part because outreach is aimed at Facebook and our tiny, crippled listserv. (I created /r/ilstudentsenate last year so senators could post resolutions, committee reports, and updates on what they're personally working on, but I'm one or maybe four reddit users in ISS (out of 54) and it never took off. Maybe next year...) I'll try to make an itemized list of "everything" ISS does and post it later, but I'd recommend coming to a meeting or two. They're not very thrilling, but it's where stuff comes together between the many committees and the Faculty-Student Senate.

Financially, ISS spends most of the money it allocates on co-sponsoring awareness or spirit events (e.g. bicycle safety, suicide prevention, UIUC's birthday, Quad Day, homecoming...), though we have made some very bad fund allocations in the past. The actual running of ISS is pretty cheap compared to most units on campus. We have no paid staff (some universities actually pay their student representatives) and only a few fixed expenses: two phone lines the University mandates we lease, office supplies, and some misc. IT costs. An associate Dean from the Office of the Dean of Students acts as our advisor, but I'm not sure she's actually paid for it (which is pretty sad).

you are saying that and a well-funded organization like the ISS is unwilling to risk that?

Yes. The ISS doesn't control its own accounts or its legal representation - the University does. Everything beyond what the University's already done would have to come from our own pockets and at our personal risk. Murph's got a lot of courage, but it also helps to have the law firmly behind you.

Also, I am concerned about whether ISS senators are well-coordinated and kept well-informed

About as well coordinated and informed as any group I suppose. I'd imagine how "informed" a senator is on a given issue trends with how much they're involved with what's being said or done. Maybe President Bolden told us about his letter to the Attorney General during his weekly report to the Senate, maybe I read about it in the DI. (I at least skim it every day.) Most likely, I just forgot about it.

They should be able to brainstorm and discuss and come up with solutions to problems faced by students, or at least be able to make some progress towards an effective solution, rather than be all talk and no action.

While I do have faith in the Champaign police, the ISS showing support and putting some pressure on the police to get the video (via a letter, call, etc) is a way to take "indirect" action (since the University fears "direct" action), and thus take care of the issue you mention here:

The unspoken feeling seems to be that Suburban Express hasn't done anything illegal or against University rules - that can be proved - yet, and that going after them more directly would expose the University to litigation.

As much as I don't like Suburban Express, I do not want an unaccountable hacktivist group to get involved.

permalink parent

[\[-\] AlmostGrad100](#) . 8 points 18 days ago

I would be more inclined to post in /r/law to ask what kind of charges could be brought against the Suburban Express guy by you, Campus Police, and the university.

permalink parent

[\[-\] burntglass](#) Grad Student, MatSE 5 points 18 days ago

The University might be able to seek a restraining order if there was concrete proof that someone from Suburban Express put up the fliers.

I think OP should go to Student Legal Services first though and see if they can help him draft a letter to Suburban Express about the website. It lists his place of residence without his consent (I'd assume), and I'm fairly certain that's not kosher.

[\[-\] undecided32](#) 7 points 18 days ago

I saw these flyers in Greg Hall (before reading this thread) and was tempted to rip the off because they seemed inappropriate. However, I was with a large group of people and didn't want to seem weird.

When I go back, I'll be sure to rip off the Suburban Express ads and this one.

How did SE find out this redditor's name? Creepy.

Dennis has doxed UIUC redditors before. Doxing really isn't that hard if you have the time to do it.

I'm making it my mission to take down all of the Subex fliers down in the FLB. I take them down from the rooms I'm in but lets be real this is a place of learning there should be no silly advertisements.

Slander (to the best of my knowledge, IANAL) is when you make a false statement about another person. This statement is neither true nor false because it is a command/request

Note: Slander is verbal. Libel is widespread, so in print or on TV/radio/whatever. In libel cases, damage is also assumed.

I don't think this would qualify as libel, but certainly defamation and harassment.

It is well known that Dennis (the owner of SE) has the maturity of a nine-year-old and does pointless things. He's probably the most hated person in the town, and for good reason. Also, he never claimed to know they did it, he thinks they did.

Basically what they said lol. I've seen him turn down apps just because he thought people were too fat. I've heard him talk about how he likes to ride a bike and almost hit asians because they apologize even though he's clearly in the fault. This guy is 100% psycho and legit needs to be under some sort of watch program.

I don't think anyone would post flyers like that about themselves (and sane, reasonable people wouldn't do it to others either).

If you still have the flyers, make sure they end up in the hands of the police. Most printers deliberately leave invisible-ink fingerprints identifying the printer it came from. A little police-state-ey, I know, but make it work for you when it can.

Yes, although it's not sanctioned by Reddit whatsoever. It also costs $3.99 a month to use, and it's limited to Firefox (as Reddit forced Google to remove it from Chrome). I'm not suggesting everyone go out and buy it, of course, but I bought it just to recover those two comments, and probably won't renew.

Yeah, I'm sure you aren't Dennis . You just had to make an account to make fun of OP. And it just so happens, this is not the first second, third, or even fourth time a redditor's first few comments are on a suburban express post either defending suburban express or harassing the person pointing out what ~~they~~ you do.

Hope your day is as nice as you are, Dennis
